

GEN. PARKER IS INSPECTING 8TH

Annual Inspection in Progress at Fort; 20th and 7th Back in Camp.

The annual inspection is in progress at Fort Bliss. The inspection is being made by Brig. Gen. James P. Parker, commander of the First cavalry brigade. He arrived here Monday from San Antonio and will make a complete inspection of the Eighth cavalry, which is a part of his brigade. He will also make an inspection of the Thirteenth cavalry troops which are being stationed east of El Paso in his command.

Brig. Gen. George Bell, Jr., commander of the fifth infantry brigade which has been stationed along the Arizona border, passed through here Sunday on his way to San Antonio, where he will make his headquarters at Fort Sam Houston. Brig. Gen. Bell was the commander of the 16th infantry at the time he was promoted to be a brigade commander.

Porch Climbers Keen For Bundles Of Clean Linen

Discriminate burglars are looking for packages of well laundered clothing. The fact recently among the second story men and porch climbers has been for canary birds, lace gowns, silk kimonos. Now a new hobby has developed—fresh linen.

George G. Garcia, 310 Texas street, reported Sunday morning, the loss of a package of laundry valued at $5 from the hall of his home. Mark Lee, a Chinese laundry man, makes a similar complaint. The Chinese bundle was stolen from a lodging house before Mark Lee had made the collection.

SERT. WILLIAM JAECKLE HEADS INFANTRY SPANISH VETERANS

The annual election of officers occurred at an enthusiastic meeting of Col. Hayden T. Grubbs camp, Spanish War Veterans, held in the Fraternal Brotherhood hall Saturday night.

The following officers were elected: First Sgt., Wm. Jaekle, company A, Sixth infantry, camp commander; Sgt. Charles C. Smith, company B, vice commander; Sgt. Augustus M. Strup, company A, junior vice commander; private Ferdinand Beaumont, company B, officer of the day; Sgt. Archie Bell, company B, officer of the guard. The chaplain, adjutant, quartermaster and color sergeant will be appointed by the newly elected commander.

After the business session a social session was held, when refreshments were served. Regimental Sgt. Maj. Walter Ulrich, retiring camp commander, presided. Members of Hamilton Fish camp No. 2, the civilian organization, and visitors from Fort Bliss were guests.

TRAVELS FROM PHOENIX TO TUCSON ON FARM TRACTOR

Phoenix, Ariz., Dec. 12.—At a speed ranging from two and a half to three and a half miles an hour, E. J. Moses is traveling from Phoenix to Tucson. He is at the wheel of a gasoline farm tractor which has been used in subsoiling demonstrations at various points in the Salt River valley. The tractor is to be shown at the farmers' short course to be held at the University, in Tucson, the early part of January.

A Narrative of Everyday Affairs

Their Married Life

Helen Gets a Surprise and Warren Adds To It.

"ARE we going to the theater?" asked Helen. It was one of the rather eventful Saturday afternoons that they had spent together of late and they had just finished lunch.

"No, I have something else in mind," said Warren as he slipped his coffee and looked across at her critically. Helen was wearing the blue suit trimmed with beaver, with a smart little toque to match. She looked well in the outfit, but something in Warren's gaze made her ask suddenly, "What's the matter, dear—is anything wrong with me?"

"Of course I would," "I wonder if this would be a good time to tell you."

"Is it anything I won't like to hear?" Helen asked this so timidly that Warren laughed good naturedly. He was always feeling well when he was drinking coffee and smoking a good cigar.

"That depends," he said teasingly. "Now, really, dear, do be serious."

"All right," I'll tell you and relieve you of anxiety on that score," and he drew out some papers and spread out an official looking document before her.

"What does it mean?" said Helen, puzzled.

"Money," said Warren shortly. Helen turned the thing with wrinkled brows for a moment and then gave it up in despair.

"Tell me what it means, Warren."

"Well, he said a little shamefacedly, "I invested a little money last week and had some luck."

Helen's joy at the announcement was somewhat taken away by her fear. "I invested a little money last week and had some luck."

"How much?"

"Well, no, we haven't; but I decided to take a fling; it wasn't much."

"A thousand?"

"Isn't that a lot?"

"It is if you lose it, but I happened to win five."

"You didn't really, dear?"

"I certainly did, that's what I am trying to explain."

Helen was silent in her surprise. "Well, are you properly impressed?" said Warren, knocking the ashes from his cigar and taking up the check leisurely.

"Yes, I am overwhelmed. Five thousand dollars." And Helen drew a long breath and the color came into her cheeks suddenly. It was certainly dangerous to speculate and they might have lost a thousand dollars, but they hadn't, and she hadn't the heart to scold Warren as she felt she ought to do.

"And now do you want to know what we are going to do?" Warren interrupted her thoughts by saying.

"No, wait," she said enthusiastically. "We are going shopping."

"Do tell me what you are going to buy, Warren," coaxed Helen.

"You'll see."

"We're going in here," said Warren, stopping and she followed him into a well-known furrier's.

"What for dear?" she managed to whisper.

"To buy you a coat," Warren announced.

Helen was speechless and she heard Warren's voice from a long distance asking to see something in fur coats for this lady.

Even then Helen found time to whisper remonstratingly. "We can do better dear; they are sure to be expensive here."

"We don't have to consider expense," said Warren, loftily, and Helen relapsed into silence at that, and the saleswoman came back with three coats over her arm and spread them over a chair before Helen.

The first was of Hudson seal, and Helen slipped into it luxuriously. Once she had looked for a Hudson seal coat but she had never expected to own one. It had a collar of lynx and was lined with brocade.

Helen picked up a caracul coat and discarded it after a brief glance.

"I don't like caracul," she explained. "It looks old."

The third coat was of squirrel, and Warren did not like it on her, so they turned back to the first model. At that moment the saleswoman came back with another coat over her arm. It was of Helen's and Helen gave a little cry of rapture. It was lined inside with gold colored satin and had a collar and huge cuffs of blue fox. A coat like that had been the dream of her life. Of course it wasn't practicable, but it was what she longed for more than anything else.

"Only $600," the woman was saying, "and this muff goes with it," and she handed Helen a muff of the same fur with a border of blue fox.

Warren picked it.

"I guess this is the coat," Warren said promptly. "I'll take it, and you can send it home right away."

Warren paid for the thing with crisp bank notes, and Helen still in a dream, followed him out.

"I'm going to put the other $400 in the bank and take this $600 and start an account for Winifred," Warren was saying.

"Warren, dear," Helen began, "I don't know how to tell you how I feel."

But Warren silenced her immediately. "Now, none of that," he said roughly. "Let's ride up on the Fifth avenue bus, shall we? I wanted you to have the coat and that's all there is to it, so don't say another thing."
